

Fay's Voice

“Summer is the perfect time to work on your emergency preparedness plans. Why? Because the first lesson of a sound disaster preparation strategy is being ready BEFORE calamity strikes.

Being proactive with your summer emergency preparedness is a key to helping to avoid, or at the very least, reduce the amount of loss suffered to your business or home during severe weather.”, states Focus Point Emergency Management CEO, Fay Glass.

FPEM Emergency Preparedness Planning Tip:

Focus on prevention. The best way to avoid a disaster is to try and prevent it from happening in the first place. Conduct regular audits and system checks of your fire prevention and safety systems. Assess your risks and potential business impacts to determine ways you can be most effective in disaster planning. Don't have a plan in place? Let us help you!

Community Partner Highlight—Debra Williams

Alone we can do so little, together we can do so much. Helen Keller

For Debra Williams CEO of Building Resilient Communities and FPEM CEO Fay Glass, their participatory leadership and relationship-based management styles reflect the heart of good partnerships. It is this good partnership that serves as a foundation to their shared, unique collaborative relationship preparing communities for disaster. What makes this partnership distinct is Debra and Fay's belief that a sense of faith, support, education, and empowerment is necessary to build healthy communities. And, without a sense of caring there is no sense of community.

Meet Building Resilient Communities

Building Resilient Communities (BRC) advocates for and provides resources, tools, and education to disadvantaged and vulnerable communities to prepare for and overcome disasters. They equip families and youth, community and faith

-based organizations, small businesses, and government. Beyond this critical mission is a deeply passionate vision embedded in scripture and faith. Building Resilient Communities envisions a world where communities are filled with hope, overcome adverse conditions, are prepared for disasters, and recover from disruptive experiences.

Under Debra's leadership BRC's deep community impact goes beyond emergency preparedness education and training. BRC strives to mitigate systemic disparities in environment, racial bias, and economic conditions by working with partners, such as FPEM, with shared interests to mitigate these systemic problems.

Debra's personal and professional power is derived from her deep seeded faith and dedication to helping build healthy communities and healthy families. She believes BRC's reason for existence is to fulfill our foundational scriptures by identifying systemic problems that cause communities to be disadvantaged and vulnerable in times of disaster.

FPEM thanks Debra for her steadfast commitment to educating and empowering all communities in emergency preparedness. And FPEM expresses its deep gratitude for this unique, collaborative partnership, and we look forward to continuing to change this world by building resilient communities together one at a time.

Importance of having children be prepared both at summer schools and home

Disasters happen, and when they do, children are among the most vulnerable. In addition to ensuring businesses and communities have strong emergency plans, educating youth on preparedness in both home and school is critically important.

Summer is the perfect time to promote emergency preparedness in a fun and relevant way. Beyond school fire drills, learning about disasters and how to respond can support children in gaining a sense of understanding and control so they are ready in a crisis to respond both quickly and safely.

According to the Federal Emergency Management Agency, fewer than half of American families have an emergency plan. But families with home preparedness resources are 75 percent more likely to have a plan. Children make up about 25 percent of the population of the United States and are the future of our communities. While they face unique vulnerabilities, they can also play an important role during emergencies. You play a powerful role in keeping your family safe!

Make Emergency Preparedness Fun for Children

Here are some vital steps to take when preparing your child:

1. Teach your kids about the different natural disasters and how to react in each one. Add in safety-themed books to your reading time. Read an emergency or safety themed book and ask questions about the characters' safe choices along the way. This allows children to think through scenarios without making it about their own personal experiences.
2. Ensure your child knows how to call

911, identify themselves, identify their location, reach emergency contacts, and get to predetermined safe locations.

3. Create and practice your family emergency plan. Make it fun with a Disaster Supply Relay Race! Gather piles of disaster supplies and have children race down to pick something they might need in a disaster. Mix in miscellaneous items to have kids make a choice. Set the timer and go!

Public Water Agencies Group (PWAG) LLC has partnered with Focus Point Emergency Management Consulting Services. PWAG along with 18 water agencies have formed an emergency response consortium with the goal of coordinating emergency preparations. This consortium has spent the last two years preparing, equipping, and training to be able to respond to a variety of regional and local emergencies as well as to provide mutual assistance as needed.

Identifying the need to have experience personnel assist the consortium agencies during an emergency, PWAG turned to Fay and her team. Adept in all facets of emergency preparedness and response the FPEM team eagerly accepted the challenge and is now ready to assist in all aspects of support as the Emergency Operations Center and Disaster Recovery Contractor.

FPEM team's expertise is key as many of the consortium agencies have few employees and employees can retire or turn over which precludes keeping small teams well-trained. If you are looking for assistance, look no further. FPEM is here to help!
